

goody bag

THE BOTTOM LINE

Not Your Grandmother's Cloth Diapers

Let's face it, using organic cloth diapers is a huge time suck, but it's also better for the earth (less bacteria-laden landfill waste), it saves you money, and it's kinder to your baby's bottom (no irritating chemicals). Plus, new-age diapers are now designed so they're super-easy to use. Forget pins and origami folding moves—cloth diapers are contoured, they snap on or attach with Velcro, and they adjust as your baby grows.

BABY BEAUTY

Star Moms Go Green

Take a cue from eco-conscious Hollywood. Celebs love these natural products for their little ones.

Jennifer Garner likes Bath By Bettijo. Its newest addition is just for babies—we bet Jen will buy Sweet B Babybottom Balm for Violet. $14.50, bathbybettijo.com

The gently cleaning Lil' Dipper Li'OneWipe is a favorite of Reese Witherspoon. $12 for 40, skincarelab.com

Courteney Cox keeps Coco's room smelling naturally fresh thanks to Thymes Sweetleaf Baby Nursery Mist. $16, thymes.com

Fifty cents from the sale of each bottle of Shea Terra Organics Nubian Milk & Honey Body Crème helps buy goats for needy families in Ethiopia—Angelina Jolie is a fan. $12, sheaterraorganics.com